Checkpoint / Thomson Reuters — Daily & Weekly Updates, Five-Minute Tax Briefing

Today's Checkpoint daily and weekly digests lead with a bipartisan Senate Finance push to extend the Advanced Manufacturing Investment Credit for semiconductor facilities (set to expire in 2026), plus a look at how two pending digital-asset bills would add regulatory clarity for crypto but could simultaneously raise criminal tax exposure for noncompliant taxpayers by removing "ambiguity" as a willfulness defense. On the federal side: the IRS announced expanded Business Tax Account features (more digital notices, payment and account management online); FASB voted Aug. 5 to require funds to mark down hard-to-sell restricted stock and opened a project to consider extending similar rules beyond investment funds; and the IRS updated its FAQ on the qualified overtime deduction, clarifying that for 2026+ the deduction only applies to overtime amounts an employer specifically reports on Form W-2. Also notable: new Cycle 4 deadlines for defined-contribution pre-approved plans (opinion letters by Aug. 31), a reminder of taxpayers' appeal rights, and Sen. Warren pressing the SEC on proposed cuts to quarterly reporting and Sarbanes-Oxley auditor attestation requirements. The Five-Minute Tax Briefing preview (No. 2026-15) flags new Treasury/IRS guidance (Notice 2026-28) on the Sec. 45S paid family and medical leave credit, which was permanently expanded by the 2025 Act — it adds an optional "premium method" for calculating the credit using PFML insurance premiums as an alternative to the wage-based method, reduces the employee service requirement to six months, and extends eligibility to employees working 20+ hours/week for years beginning after 12/31/25 (comments on blended premiums due 10/16/26). The weekly digest also has an HTML copy of the same content as an attachment — no additional information beyond the email body.

Accounting Today — Daily Briefing

Today's top story: the IRS is expanding its Business Tax Account, giving organizations more ways to view digital notices, make payments, and manage federal tax account info online. In practice-management news, Top 50 firm Sorren acquired two Nevada firms — Persing Professional Group and Carefree Professional Practice Resources — expanding its Nevada presence, while Top 75 firm Smith + Howard completed an investor flip, with private equity firm Broad Sky Partners selling its stake to alternative asset manager TPG. On the tax-policy side, the wide-ranging Taxpayer Assistance and Service Act would create a new IRS Business Child Care Liaison office to educate businesses about child care tax breaks, and a separate piece notes companies claiming carbon capture tax credits continue to face heavy compliance requirements, long waits, and rejections.

CPA Trendlines — Today's Headlines

Today's roundup is themed around practice growth and AI: a piece on turning K-1 workflow problems into profit via AI automation, and Liz Farr's "The Disruptors" column featuring Aynsley Damery on the early warning signs of business failure, cautioning that scaling models built for large firms don't automatically translate to small businesses. Other pieces worth noting: Rachel Farris (via Donny Shimamoto's Accounting ARC) on how the next generation is blending entrepreneurship, AI, and advisory into new-shape CPA careers; Alan Anderson advising firms not to take on audits in industries they don't understand and to pick a specialty; Ed Mendlowitz's "30:30 Training Method" on just getting started rather than overplanning; and pieces on behavioral finance, accounting staffing shifts, and standardizing how client data comes into the firm. Most of the underlying analysis pieces are gated behind CPA Trendlines PRO membership; the email itself is a headline/teaser digest.

Bradford Tax Institute — Tax Pro Forum Highlights

No new substantive articles today — the priority-source email in the last 24 hours was a forum-participation digest highlighting three active discussions on the Bradford Tax Institute Tax Pro Forum: (1) a practitioner asking about using "Ask Murray" AI research tool to apply refunds from delinquent returns as estimated payments in subsequent years — a reminder that AI research answers still need practitioner verification; (2) a question on a MFJ couple with SIMPLE IRAs at both of their companies claiming second-year SECURE 2.2 tax credits ($11,322 combined) — flagged as a good reminder to check SECURE Act retirement-plan credit eligibility calculations; and (3) a single-member LLC client adding a partner and converting to a multi-member LLC/partnership — a prompt to review entity-change filing requirements, elections, and tax consequences. (Separately, Bradford also sent webinar promos this week on S-corp reasonable salary risk and CPE credits — not substantive content, so omitted here.)

OTHER IMPORTANT EMAILS

- Kami Sage (S5 Site Furnishings) — "Sages IRS": forwarded two photos of an IRS notice received in the mail; also sent to Bill Harvey. Client correspondence needing a look at the attached images.
- Hascall-Denke (Chantel Smail) — two replies on setting up CPA/3rd-party view-only bank access: Truist login sent (temp password included in email), and confirmation that SouthState and Regions credentials were sent to you; Regions requires an in-person or phone setup by Mike.
- Max (modrakcpa.com) — Regions Bank supports "View Only" access for bookkeepers/accountants via its online banking user management settings, limited to balances and transaction history.
- EM Founders Group — Teams meeting invite: "Tax Discussion with Ken Margetts" (11 AM UT / 1:00 PM FL time), already marked read.
- Janney Wealth Management (Michael Ohlman) — weekly investment strategy update: better-than-expected earnings continuing to support stocks (has attachment; advisory newsletter, not urgent).
